The business of chemistry directly employs workers as equipment operators, engineers, sales people, scientists, health and safety specialists, environmental protection professionals and many other occupations. It also generates jobs that supply raw materials and services, equipment and all the other non-labor factors of production. Together, this production helps support millions of other jobs through indirect purchases that span every state in the country.